Telephone number bingo

Teacher's Notes

Preparation:

Copy enough bingo sheets so that you will have one or two bingo gameboards for each pupil in the class. (One download sheet contains 8 gameboards.)

In class:

Tell your class that you are going to practise telephone numbers by playing bingo. Hand out a bingo gameboard to each learner. (It doesn't matter if some learners have duplicate game boards. It just means you may have a few winners, rather than just one, if they are equally successful.) Explain that you will read out each of the nine telephone numbers in the game in a random order. As they hear and recognize a number, learners must cross it out on their gameboard. When they have crossed out three in a row, either horizontally, vertically or diagonally, they can call out bingo. The first learner or learners to call out bingo are the winners, but only if they have crossed out telephone numbers which you have dictated. Check this by having them read the numbers back to you. (Note: You should make an x beside each number you have read out as you play the game.) Even after you have a winner or winners, you can continue to play until all the nine numbers have been read out so that others have a chance to get a bingo, too. If you like, you can have small prizes for the winners. You could play a second round of the game, but this time in small groups, with one of the learners in each group taking on your role and calling out the numbers for more intensive practice.
